

Regional Population Trends

Region's population grows past 4 million

The region witnessed another extraordinary year of growth, increasing by 82,000 people or 2.1% to reach a total population of 4,067,000 as of April 1, 2017.

This was the second year in a row that the region experienced population growth exceeding 80,000 in a single year. The last time the region saw comparable levels of growth was in 1990-1991.

Since 2008, King County's population growth rate has outpaced the region's other three counties put together in all but one year (2010-2011). This is a dramatic reversal of the trend over the preceding three-plus decades in which King County's slice of the regional population pie continuously lost ground to Snohomish, Pierce, and Kitsap counties.

The region's fastest growing cities

Much of the King County surge can be attributed to robust population growth in the city of Seattle in the years coming out of the Great Recession. Seattle grew by 26,900 in the last year — more than the rest of King County combined (21,700) — pushing the city's population over the 700,000 threshold to 713,700.

Since 2010, Seattle's population has grown by 105,000, placing it squarely at the top of the region's list of 10 cities with the greatest nominal population growth during 2010-2017. This list also includes two of the region's other metropolitan cities (Bellevue and Tacoma) as well as five core cities with designated regional growth centers (Kirkland, Kent, Burien, Renton, and Auburn).

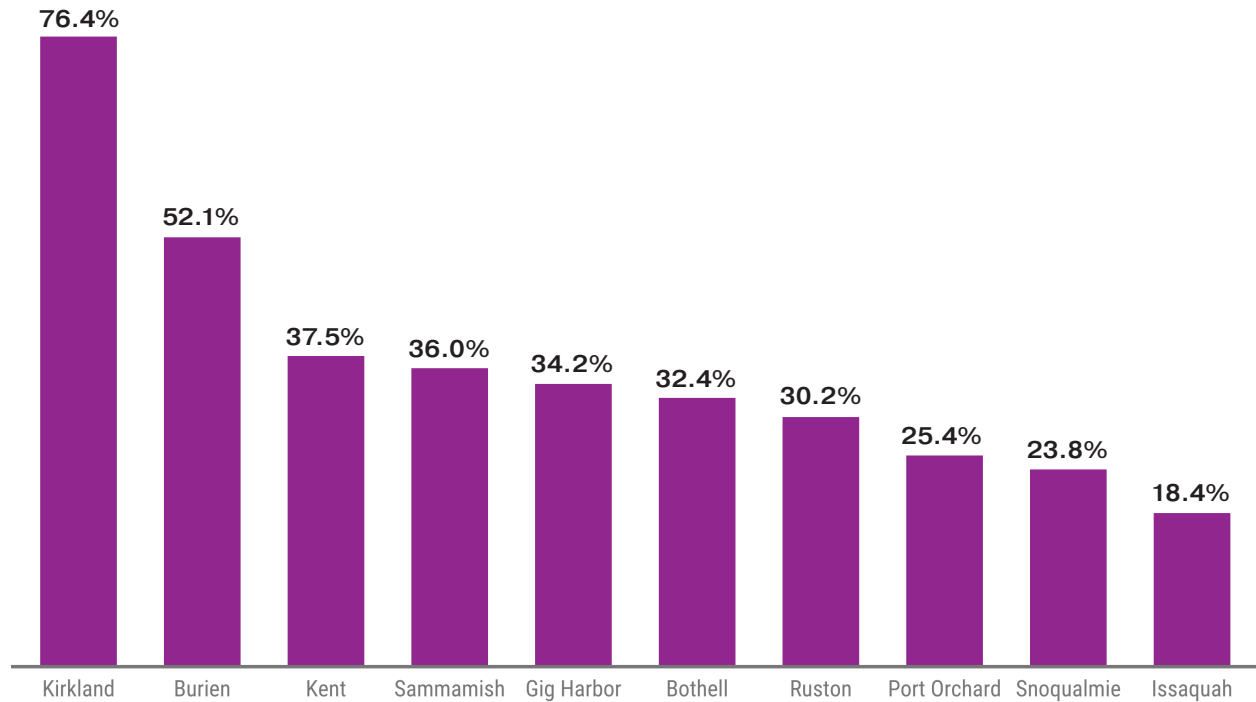

The region's ranking of top 10 cities with the greatest percent population growth during 2010-2017 includes a mix of fast-growing small cities as well as larger and core cities that completed substantial annexations during this time period. If growth due to annexation was excluded, Seattle would have ranked as the sixth fastest growing city in the region.
